

Ice cream, sprinkles and a cherry on top!

What does that have to do with how horses got their spots?

Grandpa knows and soon will Madison and you!

Advance Praise for

Two Foals, a Dash of Sprinkles and a Cherry on Top!

"Horse Lovers of all ages are sure to adore this sweet tale. . . . The illustrations, family-friendly message, and surprise twist make this an engaging story and one of those childhood favorites you'll always remember."

----- Lisa Kemp, No Biz Like Horsebiz and KempEquine.com

"What a charming book! 'Two Foals, a Dash of Sprinkles and a Cherry on Top!' offers a touch of inspiration in its teaching, and even entices more reading with its surprise ending. This book will make both children and parents smile."

---- Gala Nettles, columnist and freelance writer

"Brittany Bevis's 'Two Foals, a Dash of Sprinkles and a Cherry on Top!' put a smile on my face from cover to cover. A wonderful story for horse lovers young and old."

Pam

During the summer, Madison stayed with her grandparents on their farm.

Every morning, she liked to sit and look out the window of her room at the herd of horses grazing in the pasture below.

Just as her Grandpa had taught her, she counted the horses to make sure that nobody had strayed during the night.

One of the foals was a solid chocolate brown, but the other had little white spots covering his entire body.

“Oh no,” thought Madison, “that baby must be sick! I have to go tell Grandpa.”

One, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten,” Madison stopped. She was very confused. Yesterday there were only eight horses, but today she counted ten.

After taking a closer look, she realized that the two new horses were baby foals.
